When Cole returned to town, however, he learned, to his astonishment, that his book-dealer friend had parted with the pamphlet to the Thomson-Pitt Company, of Fifty-sixth Street and Eighth Avenue, for $950.

The widow in Dutchess county about the same time, learned, to her dismay, from a New York newspaper, that the pamphlet which, with others, she had sold for only 25 cents, was valued by its latest owners at $2,000. She promptly came to New York and protested at the East Twenty-third Street book dealer's shop. Her arguments and tears, it is believed, were unavailing, and she returned home a wiser if not a richer woman.

With Cole, however, it was far different. He met his whilom friend with Four years ago, it was reported Mrs. Wilson had sued Lewis E. Collins, wealthy wholesale druggist here. for $50,000 for breach of promise and obtained $5,000 by a compromise, although Collins denied ever promising to marry her.

She was then known as Grace Hubbard, who, she said, had lived in California in 1894. After settling the Collins case, it is believed she married Frank D. Wilson, a musician. They separated in Denver. Mourning him as dead, she recently learned through his relatives in New York that he was alive and got a letter from him dated 149 East One Hundred and Eighty-fifth Street, saying he was unemployed and with no prospects. Falling to rent rooms in her flat, and pawning her valuables, she finally wrote her sister, Mrs. Lizzio Rau, of Warrensburg, Ill., saying: "I have more trouble than I can possibly bear. H—II can't be worse than St. Louis, so I will chance the former."

When the police broke into the rooms their emptiness showed how the woman had tried to keep the wolf from the door while she was waiting for her writings to bring in financial returns. Furniture, dishes, linen and jewelry had been sold until the only articles left in the flat were a bed and a chair.

BOY DRUNK IN SCHOOLROOM

Bottle of Gib, Haif-Empty, Found in His Desk.

NEW YORK. November 25.—When Salvadore Irema, fourteen years old, began acting queerly in his class in Grammar School 73, at Rockaway Avenue and McDougal Street, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon, his teacher was unable to get a coherent explanation of his trouble from him, and she called Principal William M. Morrison, Mr. Morrison met with no better luck than the teacher. Young Irena's head wobbled from side to side, his knebs trembled, and he staggered when he tried to walk with the principal into his private office.

Once there the boy was placed in a big chair, and satisfied at last that something serious was the matter with him, Mr. Morrison called Dr. McAvey from the Bushwick Hospital. The doctor took one look at young Salvadore, who had gone peacefully to sleep in the principal's chair, and then remarked;

"A plain case of drunk"

Mr. Morrison was Incredulous, but he was compelled to believe when the teacher discovered a quart bottle of gin, half-empty, in Salvadore's desk. The youngster was taken to the hospital. Bottle of Gis, Haif-Empty, Found in His Desk.
